

How to Style and Upgrade Your Garage Door

Garage doors make a huge impact on your house's curb appeal. This is especially true for wide ones that accommodate more than one car. A plain, boring garage door may decrease your property's overall beauty. If you are looking to remodel your home's facade, you should not limit your efforts to landscaping and painting exterior walls alone. Your garage door needs a bit of styling as well. Here we will discuss how to upgrade the garage door so that it makes a style statement in the neighborhood.

Matching your home's overall feel

You can remodel your garage door in two ways: you can either make it stand out, or fit in with the theme of your home. If your home is more traditional, a garage door made of wood (or at least faux wood) is the best way to go. Add arches, corbels and other trimmings to make it look classic or Victorian. In the same manner, if your home has a modern, contemporary look, a door with sleek glass panels and iron hinges and trimming can give it an added appeal.

Most homes have a sectional garage door. These doors roll up and down, and is the most common door type chosen by homeowners. However, if you feel like your home will benefit more from a sliding door or a swing-out door in terms of aesthetics, you can ask our technician to replace it. Sliding doors are great for modern, minimalist-themed homes.

You may not want to go all out if you have budget constraints. If this is the case, the cheapest way to upgrade your garage door is by adding decorations and hardware. A wall lamp and some greenery can make a huge impact on the way the door looks without breaking the bank. You can also choose to re-paint the door, or add some stains or textures to it.

Customize it

If you have money to spare, why not have a custom-made garage door? Most of the time, professional recommended door styles and types, or those available in your area might feel a bit too plain for you. If you want a garage door made from scratch, designed exactly the way you want it, you can go ahead and get the same pattern done. There are a lot of companies that offer this service. You can just browse through their galleries for something you like.

If you want a total makeover, but still want to keep your garage door, you can try using a garage door cover or decal. It's like having a painting over your own door. The possibilities are limitless as there are plenty of designs to choose from and they are in various shapes, sizes and colors. You can even get a garage door cover that gives the illusion of having a jet plane inside your garage. Of course it's just a decal, but your neighbors will surely stop to take a look! Explore your options and choose the right one as a little change can enhance the look of your door.
